Space that works

Products and settings for high performing workplaces.

Collaborate

The collective intelligence of groups consistently out-performs individual intelligence because of access to a diversity of experience and skills. Sharing knowledge and information fuels innovation; getting to ideas faster, building momentum and staying competitive.

---

Interior Architecture. People move. Teams Change. Companies reorganise. To maintain a high performing workplace fixed, flexible and fluid zones need to be strategically planned. Connection Interior Architecture products remove the need to build fixed walls that define space. These flexible settings integrate technology, support the user and minimise the costs involved when the inevitable moves or shifts happen.

Focus

Productivity can be seriously affected by a rise in interruptions and disturbances. Appropriate acoustics are critical to maintain your position 'in the zone', but so too are the dimensions of territorial privacy and visual privacy.

Learn

Some knowledge, 'explicit' knowledge, is transferred in formal settings. However, it is the 'tacit' knowledge that we all possess - the product of our experience - that's really powerful and workplace design has a major role in how effectively it is deployed.

Socialise

A lot is demanded of knowledge workers nowadays but we all know that non-stop work is counterproductive. People get inspired by talking with others and that's how the social networks that bind teams together and spark innovation are built.
