

Case Study: Dresden Prison, Dresden, Germany

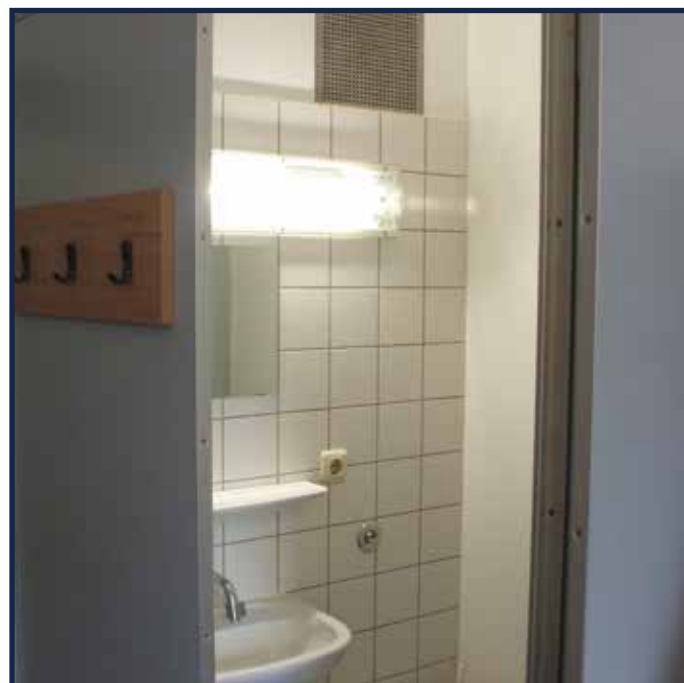

Germany's Dresden Prison, the largest in the state of Saxony, sits within the historical city. The prison's original building featured a central tower which enabled the guards to watch over the prisoners.

In the new millennium-built prison, with the help of Designplan's Abrams fittings, these high levels of visibility are maintained.

The prison holds more than 800 inmates, with security a top priority. Designplan's office in Berlin, Designplan Leuchten, provided Abrams luminaires which offer the perfect solution for this environment.

More than 1500 Abrams fittings were installed into 750 custody cells where the strong, vandal resistant units protect both prisoners and staff.

The Abrams luminaire has been designed with a completely clear cover and easily visible interior to prevent the concealment of contraband, drugs and weapons. The design includes distinctive security screws which meet the prison's requirement for quick and easy cell searches.
