

Re-generation—using old structures for new purposes not only preserves our built heritage but can be culturally desirable too. The old Co-operative building on the south side of the Clyde is one such example. The window grills added to the exterior of the building present a pleasing feature—until you look closely.

Inadequate specification has led to corrosion protection being missed out completely. Colourgalv would have provided 75 years of corrosion protection and 25 years of low maintenance colour. The bolted balconies could be removed and refurbished using Colourgalv.
