

Glasgow's Kelvingrove Museum underwent £28m, 3 year refurbishment, re-opening in 2006. Highland not only provided powder coating for the display casings but also for one of the exhibits. The display of Medieval warfare features steel sculptures coated in 'antique silver', a hammered powder coated finish.

Powder coating is available in over 250 colours and a wide variety of different textures. The tough nature of powder coating makes it ideal for venues which have high visitor numbers.
